Speaking Independent Tasks 口语独立题➤ Task 1*[Question]

Which is the best way for colleges to strengthen their relationships with communities?

1. hold free music concerts
2. provide library memberships
3. offer university level courses

[Response]

I think if universities want to build a better relationship with their communities around them, the best thing that they could do is just offer courses to the people in that community.

First off, that's a service that is really helpful. I know a lot of people that want to go back to school and learn some classes, whether for professional reasons or just for fun. My mom talks all the time about she would love to take classes in art history.

Furthermore, having community members in the class with students would be the best way to build relationships. Personally, I've made most of my friends from classes. So if my classmates were community members, that would help me to build a relationship with the community.

➤ Task 2

[Question]

It is good for universities to require all the freshmen and sophomores to live on campus. Do you agree or disagree with this statement? Give specific explanation in your response.

[Response]

I think it's a terrible idea to require freshmen and sophomore students to live on campus during those years.

First off, students aren't rich. If students can find a cheaper deal in apartments off campus or if they can live with their parents for those first few years, that'll help out those students a lot. I know I'm planning to go to college next year and it's really expensive. So if I can live at home, that would help me so much.

On top of that, I think that schools want students to live on campus to build a better campus atmosphere, but students will still spend plenty of time on campus. They'll go to classes and do activities. They don't need to live on the campus.

Writing Independent Task 写作独立题

[Question]

Some people prefer traveling to popular destinations, while others prefer traveling to less popular places. Which do you prefer, and why?

[Response]

It seems like almost everyone likes to travel when they have vacation, but not everyone likes to travel in the same way. Some people prefer to head out to the most famous landmarks. Other people would rather go down the road less traveled, and that's the group that I fall into. When I go on vacation, I like to see sites that are off the beaten path.

The main reason that I prefer less popular destinations is that most of the popular destinations are overrated. You hear so much about those famous sites, but the actual site is often disappointing because it doesn't live up to its reputation. I think the best example of this is the Hollywood Walk of Fame, the place where famous people have their name written in stars on the sidewalk. I went there five years ago, and it was incredibly boring. I took a picture of my favorite actor's star, but what's the point? It looks just like the pictures you can see online of that star.

Secondly, less popular attractions are far less crowded, and that makes them far more enjoyable for me. Perhaps some people don't mind crowded areas, but it stresses me out. I went to see the Mona Lisa a few years ago, but I couldn't enjoy the experience at all because there were so many people trying to take a picture with it. On the other hand, I visited Joshua Tree in California. It's a desert park, and there were almost no people. At one point, I could walk out into the desert where I couldn't see or hear a single person anywhere. It was incredibly peaceful. I prefer experiences like that.

Finally, I find that lesser known attractions usually make for a better story. I went to Dunhuang, in China, a few months ago. I couldn't find a lot of information about the town before I went there, so every day in Dunhuang felt like an adventure. On top of that, all of my friends were really fascinated by my trip. Many of them had never heard much about Dunhuang, so I had a lot of fun explaining to them all of the cool things that I did and saw there. It still had some amazing sites to see, but more importantly, the trip became a fun experience because it wasn't a well-known destination.

In short, I prefer to avoid popular tourist traps because lesser known destinations can still be amazing and they're generally a far more enjoyable experience for me. The next time you're thinking about traveling, try it out for yourself. Ignore the places everyone else goes and try to find somewhere more interesting.
