Speaking Independent Tasks 口语独立题

➢ Task 1

[Question]

Your university decides to remodel the dormitory and add a new space to it. Which space do you recommend to add in your dormitory?

1. Cafe

2. Study room

3. Game room

[Response]

If my university wanted to change up the dorms and add some new spaces, I think obviously they should add a game room.

First off university life is really stressful and a game room would help us to relax. For example, I spend almost 6 hours every day in class and then I have homework. I can already study at the library if I want to, but a game room would be perfect for helping me to relax and blow off some steam.

Furthermore, social life is so important at university and a game room would be a great place to make some new friends. The friends I have right now I mostly made playing soccer, and I think playing another kind of game in a game room would give me an opportunity to meet different sorts of people.

➢ Task 2

[Question]

Some students believe that students should choose what courses to study. Other students believe that students' professor should make the decision for students. Which opinion do you support and why? Use special reasons and example to support your answer.

[Response]

When it comes to choosing classes at university, I think professors should choose the classes for the students.

First off, students don't really know what classes they need. I mean, for example, I'm preparing to go to university next year, and there's classes I think sound fun but I don't really know what classes I need for my major and for my future career.

Furthermore, students at university already have so much stress and so many things to worry about. It would make life easier for them if the professors just choose the classes. I remember when my brother went to university, he was almost crying because he had so much stress and so much stuff to think about. I'm sure he would be happy if professors chose his classes for him.

    A - Being helpful to others

    B - Being honest

    C - Being well-organized

Kids need to learn all sorts of things. On top of technical things like how to ride a bike and how to tie their shoes, they also need to learn soft skills to make them grow into responsible adults that work well in society. Of the soft skills, I believe that the most important thing to teach them is to be honest people.

First off, honesty is necessary for building strong relationships. They say that trust is the foundation of every relationship, and I firmly believe that. People usually talk about that in context of romantic relationships, but it's also true for friendships, family relationships, and even professional relationships. You can't bond with someone you can't trust, and you can't trust someone that is dishonest. I had a friend in middle school who made up stories all the time, and it got too exhausting trying to differentiate between the truth and the lies. I'm sure lots of people have similar experiences, and found it equally exhausting. Social relationships are such an important part of life, so it will do well for our children to develop the honesty necessary to develop those relationships.

Furthermore, it's important for kids to be honest so that we can keep them safe. I'm sure everyone knows that kids are creative and enjoy making stuff up. This is usually all fun and games, but at other times we need honesty from them in order to keep them safe. For example, my little brother once lied to my mom about brushing his teeth for a month straight. When we went to the dentist, he had all sorts of cavities and other problems. It was a huge headache. It's incredibly important for parents to teach their kids to be honest and to teach them that it's for their own good.

Finally, being honest builds a strong sense of responsibility. Once honesty becomes a habit, people start telling the truth even when it makes them look bad. This is actually a positive thing because it forces people to confront the weaknesses in their personality, rather than constantly hiding and running from those weaknesses. This is something I struggled with a lot when I was younger. I would tell people that I'm not lazy, I just was too busy to get my work done. I said this lie to people so often that I started to believe it myself. It wasn't until I was much older that I began to improve on my self-discipline. If I had been more honest when I was younger, I would have been forced to develop discipline from a much younger age.

In conclusion, honesty is easily among the most important traits that we should teach young kids. It'll help them in many of areas in life, and it'll develop them into better people.
