It is no longer necessary to use animals for food or use animal products, for instance clothing and medicine. To what extent do you agree or disagree.

Animals have been exploited by humans over the ages and yet some people think it will be unnecessary to use them in the future. I disagree with this idea to a certain extent.

On the one hand, living without meat as a vegetarian can be a good choice. Firstly, a vegetarian diet is quite healthy because it is rich in dietary fibre and can prevent illnesses such as colon cancer.

Furthermore, there are many types of alternatives to animal protein which taste like meat but are made of soya. On top of that, many vegetarians will argue that we do not have to kill other life forms to make many products. For instance, it is now possible to avoid using animal products in clothing by using synthetic fur and man-made leather which look as good as the real thing, and their production does not involve any cruelty to animals.

On the other hand, it is very difficult to stop using animals altogether. For example, fish and meat are an integral part of many cuisines around the world. Moreover, meat substitutes such as Quorn are usually expensive and hard to source in many parts of the world. One can also argue that certain products cannot be feasibly produced without the use of animals. For instance, without feathers or wool, it would be difficult to make a lot of our everybody clothing. Synthetic materials are often too expensive to manufacture or just aren' t as effective in keeping us warm.

In summary, I believe that respecting animals' right to live is an important moral position, but we also cannot avoid using them for our nutritional requirements or performing some medical research.
